Introduction

Mental institutions are a modern development. Although born of society's sense of need and scientific advances in psychiatry, their purpose and function have remained controversial since inception.
In a hospital that is an integral part of a social and medical organization whose function is to provide medical care to the population for both curative and preventive purposes, as well as providing outpatient services. The healthcare industry is one of the most complex areas of human activity. Hospitals are mostly organizations that provide services. Health care is an important element of national expenditure, so it is important to know the nature and quality of services provided, which should be investigated. In a hospital, in a large organization, this provides significant benefits, both for the patient and for society as a whole. Some health problems that require intensive drug therapy and personal hygiene products are usually not available in the home or in the doctor's clinic, and this is only possible in a hospital setting where there are a large number of professional and technically trained people to use their knowledge and skills, with the help of world-class, modern and advanced equipment.

A hospital can be located in one building or several buildings on campus. An academic hospital combines patient care with the training of medical students and nurses, and often includes a medical school, nursing school, or university. Hospitals vary in the services they offer and, as a result, for the detachments they have.
